BEN FRANKLIN: A VOICE FROM THE PAST THAT SPEAKS TO OUR DAY

Printer’s apprentice in a provincial Puritan outpost to the toast of elite Parisian society. Penniless vagabond to wealthy entrepreneur. Reliable royalist to redoubtable revolutionary. Enslaver of human beings to preeminent abolitionist. Benjamin Franklin was all these things – and more. Wellspring of our national wit and humor, celebrity scientist, homespun sophisticate and a self-proclaimed “mortal enemy to arbitrary government and unlimited power,” Franklin’s story is quintessentially America’s story. Its triumphs and achievements, foibles and failures, visionary principles and parochial shortcomings say as much about the challenges American society faces in the 21st century as it does of its colonial past.

Join filmmaker and 16-time Emmy Award winner Ken Burns and Penn Interim President Wendell Pritchett for a free-ranging discussion of America’s most truly modern Revolutionary hero and founder of the University of Pennsylvania, the scientist statesman who speaks to our own time in a uniquely prophetic voice. Franklin once advised “Let all men know thee, but no man know thee thoroughly” and to this day he remains an intriguing and multi-layered puzzle. Burns, who has just completed a two-part, four-hour documentary, Benjamin Franklin, will bring his unique and often surprising insights into Franklin’s enduring legacy and contemporary significance with highlights from the film that is slated to premiere on PBS on April 4-5. The stakes in Ben Franklin’s day were enormous: pandemic disease versus public health; private gain versus public good; democracy versus authoritarianism. The decisions we make today carry no less risk and an equal opportunity for redemption. For Franklin’s genius, no less relevant today than in 1789, was to help birth “a republic... if you can keep it.”

Introductions:

John L. Jackson, Jr.
Walter H. Annenberg Dean of the Annenberg School for Communication
Richard Perry University Professor

Conversation featuring:

Wendell E. Pritchett
Interim President
James S. Riepe Presidential Professor of Law and Education

Ken Burns
Filmmaker
Recipient of 16 Emmy Awards and 2 Academy Award Nominations
2022 Penn Commencement Speaker and Honorary Doctor of Arts

Monday, April 18, 2022
Irvine Auditorium
2:00 – 3:15 p.m

Register Here

This event is for the Penn community. A ticket and Penn ID will be required for entry.

For more information please visit www.silfenforum.upenn.edu